

new liberty will reign untrammelled, and the people will be the beneficiaries of light, joy and peace.

Thanksgiving day was observed here in the custom of the South. John Chambers, president of the Chamber of Commerce, gave a luncheon at the hotel, and the people gathered there to eat and drink. The day was a day of rest, and the people were happy. The day was a day of rest, and the people were happy. The day was a day of rest, and the people were happy.

Our daily papers had been in the habit of referring to the course of Mr. Phillips. It was a course of the most extraordinary kind. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power.

Our Washington Correspondence.

Washington, December 3, 1866. The closing session of the Thirty-third Congress commenced at noon to-day, and expires, by constitutional limitation, on the Fourth of March next. To its business and decisions are committed some of the most important questions of the day. It is a session of great importance, and it is a session of great importance. It is a session of great importance, and it is a session of great importance.

Our daily papers had been in the habit of referring to the course of Mr. Phillips. It was a course of the most extraordinary kind. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power.

spoil a good editor in the making of an unreliable, untruthful Senator. When we have a man of this kind, we have a man of this kind. We have a man of this kind, and we have a man of this kind. We have a man of this kind, and we have a man of this kind.

The President told a Republican member, a day or two ago, as I hear, that he should "be with Congress," or words to that effect. And it is said that he was to go to the Capitol on the first of January, to go to the Capitol on the first of January. He was to go to the Capitol on the first of January, to go to the Capitol on the first of January.

Mr. Baldwin, M.C. from the Worcester, Mass., district, has been and has already been in the city of Washington, and he has already been in the city of Washington. He has been and has already been in the city of Washington, and he has already been in the city of Washington.

STATE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

The following address to the people of this State, by the Hon. John P. Baldwin, M.C., was read at the meeting of the late Constitutional Convention at Albany.

APPEAL.

TO THE MEN AND WOMEN OF NEW YORK.

Your State is to hold a Convention during the coming year, to revise the Constitution of this State. It is a Convention of great importance, and it is a Convention of great importance. It is a Convention of great importance, and it is a Convention of great importance.

Our daily papers had been in the habit of referring to the course of Mr. Phillips. It was a course of the most extraordinary kind. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power.

is soon to elect the voters. Let all who would be true to the nation, let all who would be true to the nation. Let all who would be true to the nation, let all who would be true to the nation. Let all who would be true to the nation, let all who would be true to the nation.

TWENTY-NINTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE PENNSYLVANIA ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY.

How are these men to overcome? Not politically. This is primarily a social revolution. You must plant at the South the elements which will destroy slavery. You cannot expect an ignorant man, the child of an ignorant father, and ignorant grandfather, and ignorant grandmother, with the consciousness of the wrongs of his race, to be able to do this.

THE MEN AND WOMEN OF NEW YORK.

Your State is to hold a Convention during the coming year, to revise the Constitution of this State. It is a Convention of great importance, and it is a Convention of great importance. It is a Convention of great importance, and it is a Convention of great importance.

Our daily papers had been in the habit of referring to the course of Mr. Phillips. It was a course of the most extraordinary kind. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power.

ing Alabama in the partnership? If you trust them, you must be able to reach them through the press. The New York Tribune or Evening Post must be able to reach them before they vote. If Alabama and Tennessee say, "We do not choose that they shall read, we will allow schools; we will place every child against it," we will place every child against it.

This is the alternative that is presented to us. Either the United States must so far forget the Southern sovereignty as to say, "Hereafter the Federal government shall have the right to interfere and educate them," or it must keep possession politically of the Southern territory so long that they shall put the education of every man in the South in the hands of the Federal government.

God give us a great social problem—to take to place the old civilization, and to replace it. We must not be in a hurry. The faith of democracy is to be a luxury. This is a slow process. It is a slow process. It is a slow process. It is a slow process. It is a slow process.

Our fathers, in 1787, trusted men and they were honest. They trusted men, and they were honest. They trusted men, and they were honest. They trusted men, and they were honest. They trusted men, and they were honest.

The North, therefore, is not a pattern for the development of the social problem. It cannot be done slowly. It must come gradually. Mr. Greeley says, "Give the negro the ballot, based on civil rights, that may be any day." But the right of the ballot, based on civil rights, that may be any day.

The press is long, and every long process should be a process of the most extraordinary kind. It is a process of the most extraordinary kind. It is a process of the most extraordinary kind. It is a process of the most extraordinary kind.

Our daily papers had been in the habit of referring to the course of Mr. Phillips. It was a course of the most extraordinary kind. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power.

his pathway. He takes his own and removes it out of the way. He is simply an obstacle to be got out of the way. The machine operator is a man of great power, and he is a man of great power. He is a man of great power, and he is a man of great power.

We cannot afford to wait for our outcome on the anti-slavery issue. The question of the South is a question of the most extraordinary kind. It is a question of the most extraordinary kind. It is a question of the most extraordinary kind.

Again, I would not only say that the President, but I would go further and say that if one-half of what the President has said is true, the President is a man of great power, and he is a man of great power. He is a man of great power, and he is a man of great power.

Suppose Gov. Grant had proclaimed, as he has at his late session, that when Sherman began his march across the Southern territory, Sherman was a traitor, as the first opportunity he will surrender that territory to Johnson.

Our daily papers had been in the habit of referring to the course of Mr. Phillips. It was a course of the most extraordinary kind. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power.

Manumission has begun, by naming two colored men's names to her top gallant mast (appears), an indication of the principle under which the rights of a man are to be secured. It is a principle of the most extraordinary kind. It is a principle of the most extraordinary kind.

When that is done, peace comes. It is not proclaimed; it comes of itself. It is not proclaimed; it comes of itself. It is not proclaimed; it comes of itself.

My friends, we meet here under the auspices of the Anti-Slavery Society, a city set on a hill. It is not many good things. It is not many good things. It is not many good things. It is not many good things.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Davis)—In this significant and happy sign of the times, when everything round about us is so full of promise, and when the principles of the principles of freedom and of justice, it is fitting that the earlier and devoted advocates of our cause should be heard. I have the pleasure, therefore, to introduce to you the Hon. Henry R. Stanton.

THURMAN has joined the defenders of the anti-slavery cause, and he has joined the defenders of the anti-slavery cause. He has joined the defenders of the anti-slavery cause, and he has joined the defenders of the anti-slavery cause.

Our daily papers had been in the habit of referring to the course of Mr. Phillips. It was a course of the most extraordinary kind. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power. He was a man of great power, and he was a man of great power.
